Words from our Pastor

This week I will be attending the Cooperative Baptist Fellowship Annual Gathering in Birmingham, Alabama. As many of you know, I agreed to serve on the Governing Board of the CBF, and I am in my second year of a three-year commitment. I also recently had the opportunity to chair the search committee for the new Executive Director of the CBF. That was a great experience, and I am overjoyed about our new leader, Dr. Paul Baxley. The CBF will follow the week of the SBC's yearly convention in Birmingham. Although I did not attend the SBC meeting, because our congregation supports the SBC through giving, I seek to stay informed of what is happening in the SBC. It is to a current debate in SBC life that I want to comment on this week.

In the 1980s and '90s, the division within the Southern Baptist Convention was over our differences on various church practices and biblical interpretations. One difference that divided us was the role of women in the church. Some of us practiced the ordination of women as deacons and ministers while others did not. To be sure, the large majority of Southern Baptist Churches does not ordain women nor allow them to serve in certain roles in the church. Over a period of time, it became evident that churches like Trinity might need another way of cooperation, as we were being slowly excluded from SBC life. Many of the churches that formed the Cooperative Baptist Fellowship were congregations that practiced the ordination of women as well as men. This was true of Trinity.

After three decades in a changing Baptist landscape, Trinity is still defined as a dually aligned congregation. I personally do not like the term dually aligned. I think it lacks a true Baptist understanding of church. I would describe Trinity as a local autonomous church that chooses to cooperate in the work of the Kingdom of God with other partners. Two of these important partners are the Cooperative Baptist Fellowship and the Southern Baptist Convention. A local Baptist church should not be identified primarily by its missions cooperation. That is not Baptist! However you want to describe us, we continue to support both the CBF and SBC through mission support and giving. At Trinity each member can choose a missions giving plan that includes or excludes various missions partners. (Ask me or one of our ministers for details and clarification regarding this choice.)

For the last three decades our church has continued to recognize the call of God on people's lives. As our identity statement reads:

(We believe in) The servant role of leadership within the church, which makes the example of Christ, the model for leadership and which calls forth the dedication of the gifts of all persons, male and female.

While we have continued to practice our understanding of Scripture, other SBC churches have moved to a more hardline view on women. In many SBC churches today, a woman is not only prohibited to serve as a minister or a deacon, but women also cannot teach males over the age of 12. (Can you imagine Trinity without the teaching of the gifted women in our congregation?)

At Trinity, we believe that our practice, in regards to women, is not only biblical but in the spirit of Jesus. Those who oppose women in certain roles in the church will point to Paul's instructions in places like 1 Corinthians and 1 and 2 Timothy. It is true that these passages speak to the role and activity of women in the early Church. However, I believe a deeper study of these passages will reveal that the primary issue in these churches was not women's roles but disorderly worship, cultural pressures, and false teaching. I have always believed that there is room for various interpretations on these passages. In addition, in regards to instructions for deacons in 2 Timothy 3, the phrase in verse 11 "in the same way their wives" can also be translated deaconesses or "likewise the women who serve." This instruction is to all who serve, both male and female. We know for a fact, from the writings of the Church Fathers, that women served in the role of deacon or deaconess as early as the second century.

As surely as some passages can be used to create a case for women not to serve in certain roles, there is overwhelming scriptural evidence that women played important leadership roles in the early Church. Phoebe is a deacon of the church. Junia is regarded as an apostle or highly regarded by the apostles. Phillip's daughters are known prophets. Lydia is the first convert in Philippi and hosts the church in her home. There is ample evidence that Lydia, a businesswoman, was also the leader of this house church. Priscilla, along with her husband Aquila, is a teacher and leader. When the great teacher Apollos needs further instruction, it is Priscilla and Aquila who offer the instruction. Priscilla is mentioned first and that is important in a Greek sentence. Paul writes that women should not speak in 1 Corinthians 14, but earlier in the same letter, Paul instructs women what to wear when they prophesy or preach in worship. (1 Corinthians 11:4) Paul also reminds us that in Christ there is no male or female. In Peter's first sermon on the day of Pentecost, the first sermon of the Church, Peter recites the prophet Joel and the promise that "in the last days God's Spirit will be poured out on sons and daughters and they will prophesy or preach." Then, of course, we simply need to be reminded that the women who followed Jesus were the first to declare the resurrection.

In the Southern Baptist Convention's most recent debate on this topic, there is a divide over those who believe women should have a very limited role in the church and those who now are referred to as "soft complementarians." The soft complementarians are those who believe that women can serve and teach as long as they are not the primary authoritative teacher/preacher of the church, class, or small group. They cannot usurp what they interpret as the male role. Some SBC leaders have invented a new name for this calling it the "Pulpit Preacher." This view is based on the concept of who is in authority in the church.

This view on authority in the church lacks an understanding of Baptist ecclesiology. As Baptists, we have traditionally believed that leadership is not about authority but servant hood. The Pastor/Preacher in a Baptist church is not to be one in authority but one who is the chief servant. It is the same for those who serve as deacons and other leadership positions. Our leadership is not identified by our authority but by humility and service. This is the model of Jesus.

How this latest argument in SBC life will be resolved is yet to be seen. What I do know is that at Trinity we will continue to practice what is true to our identity. We will continue to rejoice that the Spirit of God is working and calling women and men to proclaim the Good News of Jesus Christ. We will continue to cooperate with those who will cooperate with us in the work of the Kingdom of God. The Great Commission is larger than one church or denomination. The world desperately needs to know of the love of Jesus and needs to see Jesus displayed in us. Jesus said "they (the world) will know you belong to me if you have love for one another." At Trinity we will practice our convictions but also leave room for other congregations to practice theirs. We will, as our Church Covenant states, "regard all people who worship Christ as Savior and Lord as the household of faith, the Body of Christ...we shall seek also a unity of spirit and action with all Christians."

One last thought...I love being Baptist!

Words from Karen

In our Bible Book Study this summer we are attempting to discover beauty, goodness and the truth of God as presented in the Gospel. The author of "The Magnificent Story" relates the story of Vedran Smailović, a musician from Bosnia and Herzegovina. He was a cellist, and from 1992- 1995 the world witnessed one of the worst civil conflicts, the Bosnian War. Three factions, each tied to a religion (Orthodox Serbs, Catholic Croats, and Muslim Bosniaks), began attacking one another in a struggle for power after the breakup of Yugoslavia. The Serbs, backed by the Yugoslavian army, attacked the Croats and Bosniaks, but the latter two united and fought back. In the end no one was innocent of the bloodshed and destruction. Over 100,000 people were killed, 2.2 million people were displaced, and it estimated that over 12,000 women—mostly muslim --- were raped.

In the midst of the ugliness and the suffering, beauty emerged to offer a different story. As the mortar shells rained down on Sarajevo, this musician did the only thing he knew to do: he played his cello. In the midst of the destruction of buildings and the killing of his family and friends, Vedran played his cello—in full formal attire—alone in the ruins and in the streets, even though there was relentless sniper fire.

During the conflict no one knew when or where he would play, but as soon as someone heard him playing, the crowds grew. Grieving and starving, the people gathered to listen. Why? As Smailović said, "They were hungry, but they still had soul." Through this musician, an instrument of God, the people found hope and healing. Beauty in music, beauty in vision and beauty in experiences can lead us to God. We need to be on the lookout. I pray you see beauty this week.

2019 VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL

Note From Katie

Thank you to all who volunteered, prayed, donated, and brought friends and family to Vacation Bible School 2019. It was a great week of making new friends, learning more about Jesus, and learning how to be a missionary to the world. My prayer is that you and all our friends who came to Bible school will remember to never stop learning about Jesus, and that Jesus loves us more than we can ever imagine, and to share that love with the world. Already looking forward to next year! - Katie
